

CLAIMS

What I claim as my invention is a plastic envelope for filing and retrieving easily and safely electronic data together with the relative hard copy bringing together the necessary but now separate and unrelated features into one invention which has them all. Its main features which distinguish it from others not having all these necessary features are:

- 1.- A side strip with two perforations which is to be used to attach GUARDISK to the hard copy either in a ring binder, or a file, or even stapling it so that it can be filed and retrieved together with the hard copy.
- 2.- A flap or closure that will make it impossible for the diskette, CD, or DVD to fall out.
- 3.- Plastic enclosure which will protect the electronic storage material from being damaged by weather or harmful elements.
- 4.- A relatively large surface area which will allow a listing or description of its contents.